2. Clear Thinking, Clean Writing: Opinions that Really Work

Prof. Stephen Homer, UNM Law School
The essentials of communicating in opinion form, including facts and law that promote understanding of the holding and excluding what does not assist or what might confuse practitioners going forward. All this, and how to write using fewer words and clearer prose. Not much to ask, is it?

12:00-1:30p Breakouts

1. Introducing the Indian Child Welfare Act

Prof. Kelly Stoner, Oklahoma City University School of Law
Professor Stoner offers a primer on the little-understood Indian Child Welfare Act, paying special attention to the Supreme Court's decision in the Baby Veronica case.

2. Burrs Under Your Saddle

Melissa Wood, USCA/4 & Bill Thompson, MO SC
Challenges for court attorneys—we are our own best experts. An interactive discussion session with moderators. A lively forum to raise questions and concerns or offer comments on issues that arise for attorneys in court settings. Bring some conversation starters. Those small or infrequent matters can cause a bit of irritation and make it feel like riding the range all day. You are not alone.

One of NAACA's favorites provides an overview of recent developments in sentencing under the federal guidelines.

1:45-3:15p

Wednesday, July 17

8:00-9:30a Not in Kansas Anymore: What Makes the Southwest Legally Unique?

Kevin Washburn, Asst. Sec'y, US Bureau of Indian Affairs & Justice Greg Hobbs, Colorado Supreme Court

The American Southwest is an area of vast land, scarce water, Native American tribes and nations, mining, ranching, low population density, states that joined the Union later than most, and population influxes from Mexico and other regions. How do those factors, history, and the state/federal relationship shape law in this huge region?

9:45-11:15a

Breakouts

1. Thirsty States, Flooded States: Where is Water Law Headed?

Justice Greg Hobbs, Colorado Supreme Court & Daniel Cordalis, Clerk to Justice Hobbs

The West has long faced water scarcity issues and its water law has therefore developed based on dividing a small pie. But recent weather events such as severe drought on the Mississippi and in the Southeast and hurricane-related flooding in the Gulf and East coasts remind the entire continent that we all share an interest in understanding water law and where its future lies.

2. Statistics: From the Darkness to the Light – Or How to Sharpen Your B.S. Detection Skills

Prof. Michael Saks, ASU Law School

Many realities — in law and in life as much as in science and medicine — can be seen, let alone understood, only through statistical lenses. In this session, we will don new spectacles and see how enlightening (and painless) it can be. We will learn to see through faulty arguments made in words as well as with numbers.

11:30-1:00p

Breakouts

1. My Amygdala Made Me Do It

Prof. Gary Marchant, ASU Law School

Cutting edge research in neuroscience is challenging long-standing concepts of free will and criminal culpability, and is already beginning to alter the legal landscape. Several hundred U.S. cases have already involved the use of neuroscience evidence, with mixed and inconsistent results. How will neuroscience evidence alter the legal system's understanding of human behavior? How should it? This session will explore the intersection of neuroscience and the law, and help separate science from science fiction, and hype from reality.

2. Constructive Criticism

Joy Richardson, Federal Judicial Center

Webex presentation.
Sharpen your skills, not your tongue, when dealing with colleagues. A discussion format via webex/ videoconference with FJC Senior Education Attorney, Joy Richardson.

3. Read It and Reap! Join the Book Club

Prof. Stephen Vladeck, American Univ. Law School

In FDR and Chief Justice Hughes: The President, the Supreme Court, and the Epic Battle over the New Deal, James F. Simon tells the dramatic story of the struggle between FDR and Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes to decide the fate of the New Deal. This book has been called spectacular, exciting, and marvelously written. Please read it ahead of time and come prepared to join us as Professor Vladeck leads a lively discussion of the book, its tale of political and legal maneuvering between two giants, and its continuing implications today.

1:15-2:45p

Six Unnamed Agents, Two Steps Back: Where is Bivens Headed?

Prof. Stephen Vladeck, American Univ. Law School

A series of Supreme Court cases, culminating recently in Minneci v. Pollard, suggests that Bivens actions are justified only in circumstances where no other remedy exists. But is this consistent with Bivens itself? Does Bivens still offer a viable remedy?

6:00-8:00p

Reception & T-shirt Lottery

Thursday, July 18

8:00-9:30a

Supreme Court Review-Criminal

Prof. Barbara Bergman, UNM Law School

Professor Bergman discusses the most interesting criminal cases from the Supreme Court Term.

9:45-11:15a

Breakouts

1. Books, Lies, & Litigation: When Readers Get Hoaxed

Molly Manning, USCA/2 and author of: The Myth of Ephraim Tutt: Arthur Train and His Great Literary Hoax

Explore the outrageous world of literary hoaxes and see what happens when aggrieved readers sue authors for having been played the fool. Discover when an author may be criminally charged, civilly liable, or acquitted of their literary sins. Book sale & signing to follow.

2. Genes and Liability: The Next Wave of Genetic Information in the Courtroom

Prof. Gary Marchant, ASU Law

Criminal and paternity cases frequently involve DNA evidence, the first two waves of genetic data in the courtroom. Now we are on the cusp of a third wave, where genetic data is increasingly being used to adjudicate liability. For example, in toxic tort cases, the genetic profiles of plaintiffs are increasingly being used, sometimes by defendants and sometimes by the plaintiffs themselves, to prove or disprove duty, causation, and injury. In a growing number of medical malpractice cases, health care providers are being sued for their failure to fully comprehend or use genetic data. This next wave of genetic data in the courtroom will present all participants in the legal system both scientific challenges and profound ethical dilemmas.

3. Man the Ramparts, Call in the Troops: Political Attacks on Judges

Justice Ruth McGregor (ret'd), Arizona Supreme Ct.

When pressure groups, pundits and political operatives routinely distort the role of courts and the nature of judicial decision making, conscientious judges may be at their wits' end dealing with that flak. Can civil discourse be restored in judicial elections and federal nominations -- and how? What countermeasures can sitting judges take consonant with dignity, ethics and integrity? How might responses to attacks affect the judiciary?

11:30-1:00p

You Can't Touch This: the Ethics of Recusal

Justice Scott Bales, Arizona Supreme Court

Sure, volumes have been written about judicial recusal and other ethical issues. But what rules govern appellate court staff attorneys?

1:15-2:45p

SANTA FE

Established more than 400 years ago, Santa Fe is a city of deeply rooted cultures and centuries-old traditions. Old streets with adobe buildings, an extensive art scene, and savory cuisine all contribute to making Santa Fe one of the top travel destinations in the U.S. And then there's the weather. Located at an altitude of 7,000 feet, Santa Fe is a mountain town, not a desert town, with an average July temperature of 85 high/53 low.
